

Baskets and Containers

I have to confess to a slight obsession with baskets and containers. Wherever I go, whether it's grocery shopping at the supermarket or browsing in the garden centre, I'm always eyeing up random containers and deciding whether they'd make suitable props for photoshoots.

Take a look on this page for just some of the baskets and tubs available for your use. I'd recommend limiting the number used in a single session to just two, because this is usually as much moving and rearranging that a baby will tolerate.

To get a good range of images, it's best to choose two completely different styles of basket for your session – one dark and one light / one rustic and one more stylised. If you let me know your first choice in advance of your session, I'll pick a second style that will complement it and give you the best variety possible.

Also have a look at the helpcard on providing head and neck support, for find out about the more practical reasons to incorporate a basket or container into your session.

